

The Work

To compose Eastwind, Jean-François Michel took his inspiration from the rich musical folklore of the gypsies who have developed many different styles all over the Balkan and the East-European countries where they have settled. These folk tunes navigate freely between major and minor modes, between wild dances and sorrowful cantinelas, irresistibly bewitching the sad or happy souls of the listener.

Eastwind was first performed July 2, 2012 for the opening of the 61st Festival of Ljubljana, in Slovenia, by the Brass Ensemble (4 trumpets and 4 trombones) of the Slokar Academy and the soloists, Franc Kosem, trumpet, and Branimir Slokar, trombone.

L'oeuvre

Pour composer Eastwind [Vent de l'Est] Jean-François Michel s'est finement inspiré des riches folklores des Balkans et d'Europe de l'Est que les musiciens tziganes ont apportés partout où ils se sont établis. Ces musiques naviguent allègrement entre modes mineurs et majeurs, entre danses endiablées et cantilènes plaintives et envoûtent irrésistiblement les âmes, qu'elles soient tristes ou joyeuses.

La création a eu lieu le 21 juillet 2012 pour l'ouverture du 61e Festival de Ljubljana en Slovénie avec l'ensemble (4 trompettes et 4 trombones) de l'Académie Slokar et les solistes Franc Kosem, trompette et Branimir Slokar, trombone.

Das Werk

Für Eastwind [Ostwind] hat sich Jean-François Michel raffiniert von den reichen Balkan- oder osteuropäischen -Musikfolkloren inspiriert, welche von den Zigeunern in unzähligen Varianten überall dort eingeführt wurden, wo sie sich niedergelassen haben. Diese Musik schwebt frei zwischen Moll- und Dur-Moden, zwischen teuflisch schnellen Tänzen und traurigen Kantilenen, unwiderstehlich traurige oder fröhliche Seelen verhexend.

Die Uraufführung war am 21. Juli 2012 zur Eröffnung des 61. Ljubljana Festivals in Slovenien. Es spielte das Slokar-Akademie Ensemble (4 Trompeten und 4 Posaunen) und die Solisten Franc Kosem, Trompete und Branimir Slokar, Posaune.
